That what I did to David wasn’t worse than what you did to me? You have consistently demonstrated that you have not the slightest clue about what the difference is between a person who has consumed and is now ready for extended amounts of alcohol and a person who has consumed a certain amount and is ready to pass out. You do know that the two are vastly different, don’t you? In the first case, one doesn’t need much time at all to get drunk. The second case takes much longer. You don’t like the distinction, do you? Are you telling me that alcohol takes much longer to metabolize when the person is sleeping than when the person is awake? Because if it does, then I have a question for you: why doesn’t beer take longer to metabolize when you’re sleeping than when you’re awake? Because I’m thinking that you’re a flaming moron. I have it on very good authority that the alcohol level in beer does not vary during the drinking session, but that it does when you sleep. Eli: I believe you’re wrong. Not only do I believe that you’re wrong, but you should believe that you’re wrong. You may believe you know something about David’s wife, but you don’t. Maybe you just hope you do. Maybe you think it matters a lot. But you don’t know. You’re wrong about what’s best for David’s wife and you’re wrong about what’s best for David. And I’m sorry to tell you, but if you were as familiar with her as you claim to be, you’d know that this is true. You’re not only wrong, you’re simply not capable of distinguishing between David and his wife. You’re an idiot. So you are wrong about what 82157476af
